This is an image of the front home page. It shows the navigation bar which was made with Bootstrap and so was the submission button. It also has a banner for the current promotion running on the website for 25% off all bookings. The guest of the website can use the destination box to locate where they would like to go, when they want to begin going and when they want to leave, as well as the number of guest split by specific age groups.

Book with confidence.

In the second image we see a continuation of the home page. The footer was unable to be relocated to the bottom of the web page for the homepage, however it does not look out of site on the site itself on its current resolution. After the social media icon, there is a video explaining what AirBnB and how to use it. Lastly, the bottom box is a small description of what the business is and what its business model are for the customers.

In this picture the footer works as intended and will continue to do on the sign-up page.

This is the last page of the current version of the website. It shows a sign-up area for users. It asks for an email, a first name, a last name, a password followed by their date of birth. A background was put to add the first steps for travelling.

This screenshot demonstrates that the footer is working on the sign-up page. On any of the pages when you hover over an icon it will change to black and on the navigation bar the links will turn red and add an underline letting you know you are currently hovering over the element on the webpage.
